

Knowledge Organiser

History

History is the study of people who lived in the past.

Historians study history. They put events in order, and learn about how life has changed.

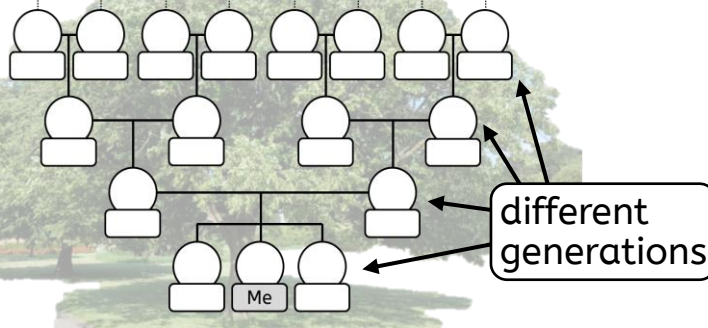

Family trees

great-grandparents

grandparents

parents

children

Sources

Sources give us information about the past. They can be lots of things, including videos, artefacts, images and memories.

Vocabulary

- artefact: things that humans have made and then left behind
- before: happening earlier in time than something else
- communication: the way we tell someone something. It can be through lots of different ways: talking, writing, or even frowning or smiling!
- family tree: a picture that shows the relationships between your family members
- generation: all the people – from the same or different families – who were born around the same time
- grandparent: a parent of your parent!
- great-grandparent: You can describe them in two ways: a parent of your grandparent, and a grandparent of your parent
- historian: a person who studies history. They do a range of jobs, including teaching, writing books, or working in television or museums
- historical source: something that tells us about the past; where we get out information about the past from
- history: the study of people in the past
- parent: the one or two adults at home who look after you*
- past: the time before now; (adjective) describing something that has happened
- present: now; (adjective) describing something that is happening now
- source: where something comes from
- sibling: brothers and sisters, including half-brothers, half-sisters, step-sisters and step-brothers
- video: moving pictures

