

Homes through time

In prehistoric, medieval and Tudor times, people went to the toilet in pots and then took it outside. There was no running water. Fires were very important to keep people warm.

medieval

- Motte-and-bailey castles were built to keep people safe.
- They were built from wood and wattle and daub.

Tudor

- In Tudor houses, the upper floors stuck out. This is called jettying and gave more space.
- They were built from wood and wattle and daub.

prehistoric

- Prehistoric roundhouses were made of wood and wattle and daub.

Victorian

- Back-to-back houses were built of brick and glass.
- Shared toilets were outside, fires were important, and there was running water.
